Wow, that takes slipping the surly bonds of Earth to a whole new level.

Here, I saw this one, a little closer, and thought of you. The blog entry was called Completely Insane Activities.

I hope it's not too much longer before you're on your feet (and then joyously off them again).

Wow. I liked the video a lot better than the idea of doing it myself!

I want to live on Mars. :-)

I don't. I like oceans, and trees, and stuff like that.

But visit Mars? Oh, hell, yes.

June 20 2008, 16:31:01 UTC COLLAPSE

Way cool. Wanna visit. NOW.

(You'd think they'd be recruiting submarine force vets for long-duration spaceflight, right? I mean, who else is used to being locked up in a can for months at a time, going from point A to point B and back? But do I get any calls from NASA? Nooooo ...)

It certainly would make a lot more sense than flyboys.

Yes, but then the ~~pretty~~flyboys would get all emo and pout-y.

Nooo, I'm not holding a grudge for spending a week in the mud, rain and cold whilst some Air Force [Expletive Redacted] repeatedly buzzed us at all..... >.>

Yes, but then the ~~pretty~~flyboys would get all emo and pout-y.

And this would differ from normal ~~pretty~~flyboy behavior how?

a week in the mud, rain and cold

Now you see why I decided to do my upholding and defending in the Navy. Yes, there was plenty of cold, wet and nasty to be had field-daying the lube-oil bay bilges, but we didn't spend weeks at a time in them.

I plotted out a story once that had the sudden discovery of simple AG/spaceflight along with the appearance of teh evel alien empire. Earth retrofitted their submarines to use in space. Makes more sense than using an old Japanese battleship grin

But does a submarine have room for a Wave Motion Gun?

Me, I'm waiting on the Mars tourist thing until I can sit inside my air-tight Mars chalet by a roaring fire and enjoy the scenery. Also, hot cocoa would be nice.

We'd probably have had room for the Wave Motion Gun -- but not if we also had to have the squadrons of space fighters and the 18 inch main battery.

Me, I'm waiting on the Mars tourist thing until I can sit inside my air-tight Mars chalet by a roaring fire and enjoy the scenery.

Erk. "Air-tight" and "roaring fire" don't play well together.

But I agree on the hot cocoa.

Ambulance With A Death Wish

Is this somehow related to you? I'm sure it must be... everything's related to you somehow. At the very least, it may bring amusement to you :)

My favorite sentence:

"The vehicle will either need to be totaled or be gutted completely, EMS Director Janene Clark said, after a deer was thrown through its windows on Friday and burst into flames on Sunday."

Silly EMTs. If the deer's going to burst into flames, you shouldn't leave it in the ambulance.

How does one determine if a deer's going to burst into flames anyway? Especially as it seems to have done so 24 hours later.
